The Little Brother Francis

Far away in the country of Italy, nestled among the sharp peaks of the Apennine mountains, is the tiny town of Assisi. It was in this city of Assisi, more than seven hundred years ago, that the Little Brother Francis lived.

His father was a very rich merchant. Francis was his only son and he had many dreams of his growing to manhood and becoming as rich a man as his father and a yet more powerful one. Francis was dressed in the finest of clothes and had everything for which a boy could wish. He was known as a child of joy, singing from morning till night songs that his mother taught him.

When he was five years old, he was taken to Assisi then, he might have been king of the boys, singing and playing and prancing through the tiny, narrow streets. It was not strange then, that when he grew to be about sixteen and soldiers of enemy countries invaded the streets of Assisi, Francis took his place among the defenseless and neither was it strange that one day he was taken prisoner and with others cast into a dark dungeon.

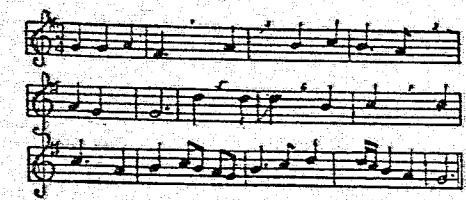

For a whole year he was forced to stay in prison but during all that time, though it was a cold, cheerless place, Francis kept his happy nature and used it to cheer the other prisoners.

At last the year drifted by and Francis was once more free, free to dance and sing with his companions. But alas! His year in the jail had made its mark. Something had happened to him. As he stood on a hill-top looking over his Assisi, his heart did not sing as usual. He seemed to see the city in a new light. In those days there were many, many poor people, many people sick and miserable. Francis had always loved everything beautiful, and misery or unhappiness were to him ugly things from which he would turn away. But now as he stood looking over his city, somehow or other, he would think of little else but the hundreds of miserable people who needed help.

His mother, Madonna Pica, as she was called, found him one day removing from the table all the fruits and good things to eat and packing them together as if he were going on a journey. She watched him and was surprised to see him take them into the street and distribute them here and there to those who were hungry. Madonna Pica was pleased, for she was a very good, kind woman and indeed helped him to pass them around. But his father, Peter Bernadone, was very angry, for he was a selfish man and few in those days thought of beggars as any but people to be left alone.

"I will beat him into forgetting these foolish notions," Peter Bernadone said. And he did! But the more his father struggled against him the more Francis kept by himself and did kindnesses unknown to him. He was afraid of his father and ashamed for being afraid, but he could not seem to help it.

One day he said, "I will not be afraid of my father any longer," and he walked through the streets with his head held high, almost in rags. People in the streets saw him and knowing who he was, that he was a rich man's son, could not understand him and so jeered at him, calling him names, and shouting, "See the little Francis!" Thus he shouted at him, the way to his home and his father, seeing his son dressed in such a way and hearing the jeers of the crowds, became more angry than ever. He was cruel, beating Francis and locking him in a dungeon. This time, however, Francis was unafraid. He had grown from a boy into a man and he resolved to leave the life his father wished for him entirely, and to devote all his time to making the suffering of the world less.

And so did he become a knight in the service of all mankind, a little brother to all the world.

WINTER FOODS

We are not limited in variety of vegetables even out of the growing season, for without the hot-house markets we have a large number from which to choose. Rutabagas are especially good at this season. Cook them thinly sliced until tender and use plenty of butter and a little cream with the salt and pepper to season. Squash is another vegetable which is so tasty when well seasoned. Seasoning is the important thing in all foods and even more important in making vegetables palatable. Vegetables oysters are a most delicious vegetable to serve in a cream sauce or in a chowder with other vegetables, such as potatoes, onions and celery.

Pork Tongue With Peas—Wash a fresh pork tongue and cook in boiling salted water until tender. Skin and remove to a hot platter. Into the stock put a can of peas—if the fresh are not in market—and cook until well done, thicken with flour mixed with a little sweet cream and pour the gravy and peas around the tongue. Serve with sweet spiced boiled beets.

Canned corn takes the place of fresh very well and the home dried when soaked and cooked is especially delicious.

Pork Chops—Place the chops in a heavy iron frying pan and add just enough water to cover the bottom of the pan. Let the chops parboil, turning often until the water is evaporated, then they will begin to brown. Chops cooked in this manner are tender, well cooked and brown without becoming dry.

Carrot Pudding—Take one cupful each of grated carrot and potato uncooked, one egg, one-half cupful of sugar, one-half cupful each of shortening and raisins, one teaspoonful of soda and one cupful of flour. Mix and steam in a mold one hour. Serve with a rich egg sauce.

Egg Sauce—Beat one egg until light, add a pinch of salt, one-half cupful of sugar, a grating of nutmeg and a cupful of boiling hot thin cream just as it is to be served. When eggs are plentiful use two, and a little more sugar.

APPETIZING FOODS

During winter oranges and other citrus fruits are most reasonable in price and abundant. Their delicious flavor stimulates and refreshes the appetite and their color adds to any dish or table.

For the first course an orange cup, filled with diced orange, a bit of grapefruit, seeded and peeled grapes and rind-flavored sugar syrup, is especially well liked.

Although the orange is delicately acid, it has an alkaline reaction which makes it especially valuable in counteracting foods that produce acids. As a dessert, oranges make an excellent sweet course, containing sugar which is partially digested. After an elaborate and heavy dinner a light, easily digested dessert is a necessity.

Orange Mint Cup—Take one cupful each of diced grapefruit pulp, orange pulp and pineapple. Mix and sprinkle with a little sugar and lemon juice—or better a lemon syrup, made by cooling sugar, lemon juice and rind with a little water. Chill and fill halves of oranges, set into sherbet cups, or simply fill the glasses with the fruit mixture. At the last moment sprinkle with finely minced mint and garnish with a sprig of fresh mint in the center of the glass.

Orange Meringues—Separate into sections four oranges, without breaking the membrane. Make a sirup of one-half cupful each of lemon juice, water and any canned fruit juice, boiling five minutes. Add the oranges, cover and cool. This is complete and may be served just as it is. Place these sirup-covered orange sections on rounds of sponge cake, moisten with a little of the sirup. Prepare a meringue, using two egg whites, two tablespoons of powdered sugar and a tablespoonful of the compote sirup. Cover the oranges and set in a moderate oven to brown. Serve cold with some of the compote as a garnish.

Orange Ice Cream—Cook two cupfuls of water with one cupful of sugar, cool and add one cupful of orange juice, a pint of thin cream, a pinch of salt. Freeze as usual.

How Boston is Helping Oxford County Doctors

Medical Men from this Region Have a Chance to Keep Up-to-Date

Mary Elizabeth Prim in Boston Transcript

For some years there has been a dearth of family doctors in rural New England. Now the physician's call is to be found on the roads. One indeed was pulled out of the mud in northern Maine six times last April. The conveyance is no longer the leisurely chaise, but more than likely a Ford. The doctor's point of view has also changed. No longer does he have to work alone and isolated. It is now possible for the country doctor to attend clinics on medical topics and to take time off to study the latest methods of diagnostic techniques.

If young doctors are becoming as interested in general practice as they were some years ago in studying to become specialists, much credit is due to Dr. Joseph H. Pratt, physician-in-chief, medical department, New England Medical Center, in Boston. Through his efforts and those of the late Dr. John G. Gehring the Bingham Associates Fund for the Advancement of Rural Medicine was founded.

The New England Medical Center and the Rumford (Maine) Community Hospital work together, through this fund, to help the general practitioner who has been out of medical school for many years and the young interne. A recent survey disclosed that more than one-fourth of the present practitioners in Maine are over forty years of age, and more than fifty, when the older men drop out, their places often remain unfilled. In some cases, Dr. Pratt discloses, it has been necessary for a village to offer an annual bonus to induce a physician to settle there.

One of these physicians now working at the New England Medical Center on a fellowship made possible by the fund mentioned above, tells enthusiastically of his experiences as a general practitioner in Oxford County, Maine. His was the car pulled so frequently out of the mud without at all affecting his interest in the practice of rural medicine. Until he accepted the post "at the end of the road, with woods all about," as he puts it, the young doctor had lived and studied in and around Boston. He went to Oxford County reluctantly as an ancestor might have mounted a covered wagon, fifty years ago, for Oklahoma.

As far as the practice of medicine is concerned, the doctor finds conditions in rural Maine not unlike those on the old frontier. It is not unusual to drive to a farmhouse in time to assist a baby into the world in a room lighted by a kerosene lamp. There are no drug stores in this neighborhood, so he must be his own pharmacist. Since he must always have a complete supply of drugs and medicines, he called on a case, if it is necessary to carry not one little black bag, but two.

Variety, Complete. In one of these villages, north of Boston, with its post office, general store, churches, telephone exchange and possibly small mill, the doctor finds more varied opportunities for general practice in a few months than he might have during a long lifetime in a big city. Though a locality where practically every resident farms his own acre of land, there are acute surgical cases, fractured skulls, unfortunate lumberjacks, accidents in the paper mills, obstetrical cases, pneumonia.

For diversion, there is excellent hunting and fishing. The overwhelming sense of loneliness that the pioneer doctor knew is dissipated by clinics which the young rural physician attends at the Rumford Hospital. These are conducted by assistants from the medical clinic of the New England Medical Center, made up of the Boston Dispensary and the Floating Hospital, now firmly anchored at 20 Ash Street.

In addition to the clinics which are attended by physicians practicing within a radius of twenty-five miles about Rumford, there are clinicopathologic conferences conducted by the pathology department of Tufts Medical School. This service also includes the pathologic examination of surgical specimens and performance of autopsies.

The valuable fund through which these clinics and conferences are managed benefits, as Dr. Pratt puts it, "both the young fellow who wishes graduate study and the old fellow who wants to brush up his medical knowledge." And permits both to do each other.

Hitherto it has been difficult for older physicians in rural districts who wished to study modern methods to find someone to take care of their practice, because of the appalling lack of country doctors. Now the medical clinic at the Medical Center supplies well-trained young physicians who have come to Boston for graduate study. These take over the practice of the rural doctors, permitting them to come to the Medical Center.

A survey disclosed that the rural physicians were interested in laboratory medicine rather than clinical. As Dr. Pratt explains, they wished particularly to understand the technique of Roentgenology and the interpretation of X-ray films. Doctors who find that the medicine they learned twenty-five years ago is practically archaic now, wisely regard the new techniques of kidney functional tests, of basic metabolism, heart and gastric studies made possible in part by the use of a fluoroscope at the New England Medical Center—no monoplane, the like of which may not be found anywhere else in these United States.

Send Patients Also

The graduate fellows who come to the Medical Center from rural Maine and New Hampshire are given microscope and desk space in the laboratory and, through the fund which makes possible their study here, are provided with an excellent library of standard textbooks, systems of medicine, monographs and current periodicals which they may use at the Center. Physicians in rural districts, or indeed anywhere in New England, may send out patients to the observation ward at the Center. This is devoted to diagnosis only and does not duplicate the work that larger hospitals in Boston are already doing. When the examination is completed, the patient is referred to another institution if hospital treatment is indicated, or sent back to his own home where the required treatment is carried out by his own physician.

Medicine in rural Maine has a further tie with the New England Medical Center through the practice of having members of Dr. Pratt's staff serve, as resident physician at the Rumford Community Hospital. Each remains one month only, for, as Dr. Pratt says, "Able young men eager to increase their knowledge of medicine as rapidly as possible are rarely willing to isolate themselves in a hospital in a small city for as long a period as a year." The visiting physicians, he discloses, like the hospital and respect the ability and worth of the local physicians. The members of the staff of the hospital

More Than Ever It's Things To Wear This Christmas

Men always have preferred things to wear to gadgets and gewgaws. This year many actually need them. Husbands and Fathers have foregone new suits and overcoats so that wives and children would not feel the pinch; many a young fellow has seen the price of longed-for ties or shirts invested in a dinner or movies. Now is the time to make it up to them, and give sensible, stylish things to wear. The picture above gives you many a suggestion you will find here at our store. Come and look.

PARENTS OF NAVEL ORANGE

From Two Trees Has Grown an Industry Which is Now Estimated in Millions.

From two lone orange trees, to which buds of the seedless "navel" orange of Brazil were grafted some years ago, has grown an industry which last year showed a net profit of some forty million dollars. Today one hundred and seventy-five thousand acres of California land is planted to navel oranges, which are set out in numbers ranging from 80 to 130 trees to the acre.

William Saunders, one-time superintendent of the government horticultural grounds at Washington, D. C., learned in 1870 that a new seedless orange had been developed at Bahia, Brazil, and procured 12 of the young trees through the aid of a missionary. They were brought to the United States and planted under conditions as nearly those of their native land as could be found, but they could not withstand the more rigorous northern climate, and they soon died. Buds had been taken from them, however, and grafted upon sprouts of native propagation. Two of these sprouts survived and were transplanted to the West coast in 1875.

From them have sprung the thousands of trees which have made the navel orange the foremost among the many varieties of oranges. Every year buds have been taken from them to impart navel characteristics to home-grown seedlings, and still though somewhat ravished by time, these patriarchs annually add their small quota of thousands of bushels of fruit their offspring yields.

One of them stands just outside Riverside.

NORWAY VICINITY

The National Recovery Act

To invoke the war powers of the President, to regulate foreign trade in commodities, currency, gold and silver; if necessary to embargo gold or foreign exchange; to fix restrictions on the banking operations under the Federal Reserve System, to regulate the currency of the Federal Reserve Board.

To eliminate the existing system of compensation for and allowances to veterans, and set up a new system with himself at its head.

To reduce by executive order the salaries of government employees by an amount not to exceed fifteen per cent up to the finding of commensurate reductions in the cost of living.

To consolidate or rearrange bureaus in the executive branches of the government, or eliminate them altogether as the interests of economy may dictate.

To repeal by Presidential proclamation sundry new taxes provided in the Industrial Recovery Act upon the restoration of business or the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment and the resumption of the sale of alcoholic beverages.

To publish income tax returns held secret in the past, as the public interest may dictate, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe in or by regulation.

To inflate the currency either by open market operations in Federal securities, devaluing the gold dollar by not more than fifty per cent, or by issuing currency notes to the amount of $3,000,000,000 or accepting up to $200,000,000 in silver in payment of the war debts due from European nations.

To give conscripts, to $10,000,000 employed young men in reforestation work.

To appoint a coordinator of railroads to effect economies among common carriers and increasing service to the public.

To appoint a Tennessee Valley authority to develop the water powers of the Tennessee River basin, including the completion of the Muscle Shoals dam project.

To process of carrying out the numerous and complicated tasks, the President has appointed national-wide boards, with General Hugh S. Johnson as a general potentate, located in Washington, to supervise proceedings.

A Blue Eagle, under the initials, N. R. A., has been adopted as the emblem, with "We do our part" as a motto. These cards have been distributed everywhere throughout the land with the idea of designating a preferred class to deal with and arouse enthusiasm for the great effort.

Signers of the N. R. A. agreement have come in by the hundred thousand. The movement is substantially national in scope. It calls for a reversal of the American bargain hunting habit and the doing away with intensive economy. A case in point is worth noting. Newark, New Jersey, is one of the several seats of the hat manufacturing industry. At a recent meeting of workers in that line held at Newark, Patrick McGovern, one of the delegates, remarked most pertinently: "I watched you fellows come in, and a lot of you were bare-headed. You ought to know better than that."

Many million Americans "ought to know better" than to do what they have been doing in the matter of squeezing the dollar until the Eagle has had to scream out in agony. The hat industry is not alone in suffering from a bare-head habit that has seriously affected it. McGovern sounded a needed note. Industry has to depend upon the money flow; wages and prosperity are alike imperiled when this happens.

There is no lack of money in the world. The Treasury Department recently made it known that $1,951,000,000 in deposits in the country had $31,737,728,000 on deposit—an incredible amount of deplete wealth when you come think of it. The trouble is to put it in motion; stagnant money is like a stagnant pool: it can only breed malaria.

In the process of exercising the vast authority given him, President Roosevelt has demoralized the dollar, taking the country off the gold standard; that is the promise to redeem in coin no longer holds, having followed England, who has adopted the same course toward the pound sterling, and other foreign countries that have placed their currency upon a paper basis, Spain, Switzerland, Holland, Norway and France retaining the gold standard, although the latter country has devalued the franc from 19 1/2 cents to 33 1/2 in gold or 52 1/2 in American currency.

He has also started the completion of the Muscle Shoals project. In addition, the Home Loan offices have been opened in New York and elsewhere to take over mortgages from property owners who are oppressed by getting loaned and to give aid to others who may need loans.

In order to bring about as much uniformity as possible and keep the signers under Federal control, a series of "Codes" have been devised by the officials to which all have to subscribe. Failure to do this puts them in a license class, under close supervision, to prevent unfair practices that may operate to the disadvantage of those who conform.

One of the outcomes is an agreement to loan New York City $44,000,000 for the construction of a tri-borough bridge to unite Manhattan, the Bronx, and Queens. This is expected to one way and another give work to 18,000 men.

FROM MY WINDOW

Eva L. Shorey

Hullo, everybody! as the radio announcer says. The wave of activities of one kind and another has swept me away from my window much of the time, and while I read the Advertiser each week, and enjoy its contents, I haven't "done my part?" So here goes!

Scene from Last Writing
 The scene has changed since July and August. Now the ground is covered with icy ruts and mounds, with snow in spots, although on Thanksgiving day the lawn was so soft it got all rutted up by a friend's auto, parked under a tree, at my own suggestion. School is in session, and I note with much satisfaction how the little ones are safe-guarded in crossing the street, the teachers coming out with them and waiting until they are safe across the Roosevelt highway, with its swift going trucks and cars. Over at the Town House, the Selectmen are wrestling with the CWA projects, and all that it brings of endless official documents to fill out, reports to be made, selection of men for the jobs, a heart-breaking task, as there are more men than jobs. I asked one of the Selectmen yesterday if he didn't need a stenographer, and he said a dozen! That is, he had a list in one hand the pile of official documents needed.

Project in Perry's Woods
 I went down to the foot of the pond to watch a project going on there, with being built through a rough road is known as the Perry Woods. This was given to the town by the William Perry family, with the hospital trustees as executor, and is being the lower part of the Perry home property given for use as a hospital.

Part of the foundation of this road are of cement taken from a sidewalk on Highland Road which is being turned up for the improved road, the walk having been covered by truck loads of gravel put on the road in the spring, something which is happening to many stretches of sidewalks in our village.

Picks and Shovels at Work
 About 12 men were working there, with Claude P. Meserve as construction engineer, in position for which he is well fitted, being a college graduate in that line. With picks and shovels they were digging up the ice covered rocks and dirt, having trimmed the bushes, dug out the stumps, and other work of that kind. Trucks were coming along the rough way and a road was gradually developing. A fire of brush gave out a little warmth, and was encouraging to the men. Years ago, if anybody had suggested such a thing in December he would have been bawled out. But there are no murmurs here, at least by those getting the work. They are thankful enough to get the pay check.

Who knows but this will develop a spirit of bucking against the cold weather and natural obstacles and put a new spirit into these men who have become discouraged by the winter weather? Maybe some of the women will get busy knitting mittens for the men who are working out-of-doors, or, as I saw one woman, making a mackinaw for an out-door worker, out of some mill cloth which had once served as a coat.

Fish Rearing Pool
 This cooperation is better than criticizing what seems a waste of money, any one on an out-door worker, out of some mill cloth which had once served as a coat.

Billy's Christmas Flowers for Mother

By Martha Banning Thomas

Billy loved flowers, particularly red ones. From the moment he could toddle around alone, he had been fascinated by the flowers in his mother's garden and pulled off all the heads. This was out of sheer love, not mischief.

When Billy grew to be three years old he still loved red flowers, but he did not pull off the heads. He kept them tightly in his fist, and smiled with contentment. One afternoon his mother took him shopping with her. There were a few last things she needed before Christmas. Billy was excited by the bustle and happy to look at the things. He was with his mother's side and looked at everything with all his might. Once, when they were waiting to cross a street, Billy's eyes grew rounder than ever, as he was looking straight at a large red poinsettia in a shop window. He had never seen anything so beautiful.

The policeman's whistle blew. People screamed across the street. But Billy's mother found that her little boy had not come with her. Somehow he had slipped away. She felt a moment of panic and ran back to the policeman behind the traffic light guard. "My little boy," she gasped, "I don't know where he is!"

Then she heard a clear call. "Mama! Here's a present—for you!" Billy's voice. She and the policeman looked toward the other end. Weighed in between people's legs and bundles stood Billy waving a great red flower. His face was all smiles. "A—SSSmas present!" called Billy again.

His mother and the policeman made a dash for him. The lights changed. Traffic moved by. "Found it in a garden!" said Billy. "Right there!" A surprised clerk was looking out of the flower shop window.

"Red and lots of pretty flowers," called the child, "not dead like our garden!"

"Thank heaven!" breathed his mother. "And thank you, Billy, for my present!"

The policeman grinned and Billy's mother went in to pay for the flower. "He doesn't know any better. He thinks your shop is a garden," she explained. "I'll try to make him understand."

"Oh, that's all right," replied the clerk. "Merry Christmas, I'm sure!" Billy's mother hugged the child with a prayer of thankfulness in her heart, and shuddered to think of what might have happened. "This is a Merry Christmas," she smiled, and Billy wondered why she held him so close.
